

EPA Webpage Resources August 2016

EPA has been redesigning its web pages. This means that many of the links no longer work or have been modified. Below is a new set of links that should help you find drinking water resources as well as a new Public Awareness kit for utilities. Other agency links are also provided.

Planning for National Drinking Water Week in May

Drinking water and wastewater utilities can use EPA's newly released Water Utility Public Awareness Kit to reach and inform their customers and communities about the value of water services. Using print, web, and TV communication methods and approaches, the kit includes an infographic poster, mailers, video, web, and print public service announcements. Some of these materials can be easily personalized with the utility's own logo.

You can view and/or download the Water Utility Public Awareness Kit on EPA's WSD website at:
